Overview

In September and October 2020, Girls for Development Goals Foundation (GDGF) entered into a formal partnership with The Sisters Show — a U.S.-based platform founded by the five CeeSay sisters — to steer up conversations on girls' and women's health across Nigeria. Two GDGF community facilitators — Edidiong and Ojumah Preslyn — each conducted multiple recorded conversations with girls and young women across different parts of Nigeria, collectively producing approximately 5 video recordings. These were submitted to the CeeSay sisters for broadcast and distribution through The Sisters Show platform.

The model: Two trusted community facilitators — Edidiong and Ojumah Preslyn — each conducted multiple recorded conversations, producing approximately 5 pieces of authentic community health content from across Nigeria, delivered to a US-based international platform at a total GDGF investment of USD $100.

About The Sisters Show

The Sisters Show is a U.S.-based initiative founded by the five CeeSay sisters, designed to spark meaningful conversations on women's and girls' health, empowerment, and development — creating accessible, community-relevant content for African and diaspora audiences.

Why this partnership mattered: The Sisters Show provided an international distribution platform. GDGF provided on-the-ground facilitator relationships and community trust. Together, the partnership produced authentic Nigerian community health content for an international audience — something neither organisation could have achieved alone.

Activities

Community Facilitators — Edidiong and Ojumah Preslyn

GDGF identified and supported two community facilitators — Edidiong and Ojumah Preslyn — providing each with a stipend to conduct recorded health conversations with girls and young women in their local communities across different parts of Nigeria. Between them, they produced approximately 5 video recordings covering the full range of agreed health and development topics. This model — two facilitators, multiple conversations each — reflects GDGF's approach of working through trusted local voices to generate authentic community content at scale.

Topics Covered

Menstruation

Normalising menstrual health conversations in communities where periods remain taboo — building directly on GDGF's core menstrual health education mandate.

Sexually Transmitted Diseases (STDs)

Providing accurate, accessible information on STD prevention, transmission, and health-seeking behaviour — a topic frequently absent from school curricula.

Future Career Paths

Broadening girls' awareness of career possibilities and encouraging them to plan futures beyond the expectations their immediate environments may impose.

Parental Support Systems

Discussing the role parents and guardians play in girls' health and development — and how to navigate situations where that support is absent or insufficient.

Video Production and Submission

Edidiong and Ojumah Preslyn recorded their conversations and submitted the video footage to the CeeSay sisters for use on The Sisters Show platform. The videos represent documented, community-generated health content from different parts of Nigeria — authentic dialogue on topics that are rarely discussed openly in community settings.

Results and Impact

~5 recorded community health conversations

Each video represents a real, unscripted conversation on topics rarely discussed openly in Nigerian communities — documented community evidence with advocacy and training value beyond the immediate audience.

International platform access

GDGF's content reached The Sisters Show's US-based and diaspora audience, extending the Foundation's reach beyond Nigeria and signalling an organisation operating at international partnership level.

Efficient community reach through trusted facilitators

Two facilitators — Edidiong and Ojumah Preslyn — produced approximately 5 conversations at a total investment of USD $100. Each facilitator conducted multiple sessions, demonstrating that trusted community voices multiply output beyond their individual contribution.

A replicable model

The same structure — facilitator stipends, community-led recording, international platform submission — is replicable at larger scale with greater investment and a wider facilitator network.

Learning and Recommendations

Edidiong and Ojumah Preslyn each conducted multiple conversations — demonstrating that a small number of well-chosen facilitators can generate significant content output. Future iterations should formalise output expectations per facilitator and provide structured topic guides.

Video documentation of community health conversations creates reusable assets. Future programmes should include a content management and archiving approach for all videos produced.

The international partnership dimension — GDGF co-creating content with a US-based platform — is an underutilised asset worth developing further. Diaspora-linked partnerships open access to new audiences, funders, and networks.

Partners and Acknowledgements
